SYNOPSIS

Lord Chumleigh-Winston visits Churchman, a camp in the Canadian Rockies to look after his company, 'The Farthest North Syndicate Ltd.' The lord is an irascible old fop and has employed as a guide, Ned Lightning. The lord imposes his dictatorial manners upon Ned until the guide rebels, taking possession of the camp and forcing Horace Tubbs, Lord Chumleigh's valet, to serve him. Ned decides to impersonate the lord and visits Churchman for one grand fling. Grant Knowles, the manager of the Syndicate, has plotted to obtain land owned by John MacDonald and his daughter Ethel. Knowles' secret Weston, is killed while walking with Ethel, and old John MacDonald is accused of the crime. Upon the arrival of Ned, as Lord Chumleigh, Ethel appeals to him to save her father. The visiting Providence Court is due to sit the next day when MacDonald will be placed on trial. The circumstantial evidence which Knowles will present makes conviction sure. Ned, to save time, effects the escape of MacDonald who proves to be the pal of Ned's father. MacDonald tells Ned that he saw Indian Bill near the scene of Weston's murder. Ned rescues Indian Bill and captures him after a thrilling chase. The trial has progressed and the jury is ready to announce the verdict of guilty when Ned arrives with the Indian. The Indian points out Knowles as the murderer of Weston and he is killed while trying to escape from the courtroom. In the meantime, Lord Chumleigh has escaped from the camp where Ned had left him under guard of an Indian, and arrives at Churchman's. Explanations follow and the English Lord appoints Ned general manager of his Syndicate and agrees to pay a million dollars for the MacDonald property. Ethel accepts Ned.
